The Aviator – Can a parrot, designed by nature for millions of years, be truly mentally and physically healthy without flight? The Parrot University has spent 20 years researching what makes a parrot a parrot. We have found the number one characteristic that defines “a parrot” is its ability to fly. Flight is fundamental to every component of a parrot's mind and body.

Learning to fly well is the most complicated and important task a parrot can learn. Your pet will be healthier, more active, more coordinated, and increase its' visual acuity. Flying helps with language development, higher intelligence, self-confidence, self-esteem and ultimately makes a very social companion.

These problems frequently cost owners thousands of dollars in veterinarian, trainer, and damaged property bills. Medication is the most common approach used to treat anxiety® unfortunately, drugs are expensive, time consuming, risk negative side effects, and often result in very limited improvement. But there is another solution that is highly effective for most dogs. The history of Thundershirt is truly a story of a common problem in need of a simple solution.

That's when Triple Pet was born; immediately after new products had to be developed to go along the toothbrush, the first one of these products was the All Natural Vanilla Flavour Toothpaste, as unique as the triple head Toothbrush, the market had never seen anything like it, no sugar added, sweetened with Stevia, no foam making formula, breath improving flavour.
